

HOUSING RELOCATION 911

Welcome to Fayetteville, NC, where all roads offer easy access to Ft. Bragg and Pope Air Force Base. Named by TIME Magazine as “America’s Most Pro-Military Town, the City of Fayetteville is the primary hub for housing, shops, eateries, entertainment, and healthcare for relocating military personnel and their families. The sixth largest city in the state of North Carolina, Fayetteville is ranked as one of the top five cities in this country for best places to sell a house.

Relocating from one military base to another means finding new housing, locating new schools, securing new employment and packing up everything to be moved. Retaining one's sanity during a military move takes a lot of organization and planning!

Being able to live in military housing is one of the most substantial benefits available to service members. For those personnel and families desiring to live off post, look no further than Fayetteville, which currently has over 4000 homes for sale and close to 1000 homes for rent. The easiest way to get started in your search for housing is the internet. You can find out everything about your new location weeks, even months, before you move. Search online for photo galleries of city streets and surrounding areas and find websites for the local newspapers. Also, many real estate agents and property managers advertise their homes and properties online. Easily, you can develop a rapport with these professionals to help make your transition to your new duty station more smoothly.
